Statement of Significance

Last updated on - June 9, 2004

Rare and localised

This tree is a large example of Oriental Spruce which is rare in cultivation (although now commonly grown in pots for Christmas trees). It is growing on a grave and is the only tree in the Stanley Cemetery. The canopy of the tree was damaged about 50 years ago, on the north-east side either from fire or lightning but has since re-established itself.

Picea orientalis is a native of Caucasus and North East Asia Minor.
