Statement of Significance

Last updated on - December 10, 2008

The site appears to have undergone limited disturbance in the past and may contain substantial in situ structural remains and associated archaeological deposits.

The site is connected to the historical development of the Ballarat region. It is also possibly associated with the development of religious activities in the area and state/colony.

The site has the potential to contain substantial undisturbed sub-surface features and deposits of archaeological material.

Interpretation of Site	Site appears to be remains of a structure (likely domestic) and associated outbuildings and orchard. May be connected to the redemptorist order who established a monastery among this section of the road in Alfredton in the mid 1880s.
