VHR history

The ketch, Dart, which regularly called at Melbourne, parted her cable when anchored at Queenscliff on 11 July 1887. Bound from Melbourne to Westerport carrying a cargo of 250 bags of oats, and a general cargo valued at 200, she drifted onshore about 300 yards to the North of the Queenscliff old jetty near the creek leading into Swan Bay. "The Master, Mr William Woodburn, owing to the heavy swell, was letting out more cable when a sea struck her and she parted her anchor. The vessel's head turned in shore, and another anchor was let go, but this did not hold her, and she drifted in shore, striking one of the fishing boats and carrying away the headstays. The Dart was then beached, and heavy seas broke over her. There were only two persons on board at the time, Mr Woodburn and a seaman. They stayed on board as long as it was possibly to do so with safety, and then took to the boat and came on shore, but have lost all their personal effects." (ID 152)
